

FIRST HALF OF PROGCON (Midterms)

College may be challenging for many students and professors because they may find themselves confused in certain situations that require critical analysis. However, with these challenges and obstacles, we can learn from them to help us reach our goals, in turn for our success. In my first half of this subject, skills and knowledge had improved. In terms of the written exam, honestly, it's hard. I don't know if it's hard because I don't study well due to other subjects and I just read the activities and quizzes within the day. But then, as I look and scanned the exam, it's like I don't know anything or everything because questions are not taken to any of our activities and it is basically understanding. How well you understand and analysis the lessons that has been discussed. Some questions are things that I've recall but others are instincts only. But thankfully, as we are good students, we're so lucky that our professor is so considerate and so kind, she provided us second chance to review and change our answers for the better ones. These second chance, helped us a lot to pass the given exam. Also, she gives us time before to take the second chance to review for a while and proceed with the exam. I feel so honored and lucky to have this kind of professors that she wants all the students to pass the exam and care for the grades of the students no matter what behavior or attitude that students create in the class. Overall, this class is something that students wished for; approachable professor and helpful classmates.

Through the week of semester, college has taught me that despite failures, everyone can reach their goals because we all have the capabilities of having critical mindset and determination. We can learn from our failures and successes while collaborating with each other and manipulating new strategies. As the professors promote open environment for the students, this showed me that some strategies in learning includes focusing and analyzing the professor discussing, regularly participating in the class and asking questions when you don't understand something and it bothers you, for it to clarify, not only for you own good but rather to other students that are shy to asked question and it is the same as what you wanted to know.
